

PREACHERS PROTESTING.The Fight of Brooklyn Property Owners Against a Rapid Transit Scheme.

In spite of the heat, that was reflected from the factories, plain in front of the City Hall in Brooklyn yesterday afternoon, the Common Council chamber was thronged by proprietors who appeared to protest against the granting to A. R. Culver and others the franchise to build an elevated railroad from the bridge to the depot of the Prospect Park and Coney Island Railroad Company, and also a connecting branch by way of a tunnel, to the Avenue of the Americas, which the company for the Pearl street property owners, declared that the rapid transit scheme went in a round-about way to connect New York and Brooklyn.

The true solution of the problem was to have an underground railroad, the Coney Island scheme afford an opportunity for property owners to go to the courts for compensation for damages. They had not received justice in those quarters, and the hope of the people was to get redress.

Ex-Assistant District Attorney Moore presented a petition signed by a large number of property owners, who said that, among them, Mr. White, who has spent a large sum there in the construction of improved tenements, to give each family privacy.

The Rev. Father McCarty, pastor of St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church, in Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, which has a population of 10,000, and 100,000 visitors a day, said that he was struggling to build up his church and by penny collections to pay off the mortgage; but if it was decided to tear down the building, it would be destroyed to the extent of $25,000.

The Rev. Father McNamara, pastor of the Roman Catholic Church of Our Lady of Mercy, Dumbo, Brooklyn, said that he had a congregation of 8,000 persons and a large school. The windows of the school room had to be opened to warm weather, and if an interval passed between the opening and closing of the windows, a person might step from the cars to curb, only twenty-five feet wide from curb to curb.

The Rev. Mr. Merwin said that he had a little house in Baltic street, which he purchased for $1,000, and that he could not afford to do more than open the door to his grandchild so she could shake hands with the passengers from the window of the second story.

J. D. Warner thought that a Baltic street elevated railroad would bring South Brooklyn tenements would follow its line and would spread to such an extent that the counsel for the railroad company what was to be done in compensating the property owners for the laying of the tracks.

John Culver said that when he asked the man who wrote the Lord a letter and then went back after the talk about the proposed property owners another hearing next week.
